Sulfathiazole Used Against Calf Scours

Calf scours treatment with vitamin pills or tablets does no good. That's the latest word on the subject from Cornell university. Those in charge of the Cornell work say: "Studies involving approximately 60 heifer calves of various dairy breeds show that supplementing a normal diet with capsules or tablets containing vitamins A, D and E, ascorbic acid, and several of the B vitamins did not reduce the incidence or severity of scours."

Soviet Drug Termed Partially Effective

Research Discounts Miracle Claims for ACS.

SAN FRANCISCO.—American scientists have proven that the Russian "miracle drug" ACS, claimed to stretch man's lifespan to 150 years, is partially effective.

Once believed a hoax, ACS now has been found to be a promising new treatment for high blood pressure, rheumatism, stomach ulcers and the repair of broken bones. But it still won't cure cancer or make grandfathier immortal.

Dr. W. H. Manwaring, emeritus professor of bacteriology and experimental pathology at Stanford university, cautiously confirms some of the spectacular Soviet claims for the "magic" serum. Writing in California Medicine, official journal of California Medical association, Dr. Manwaring reports initial experiments on animals show ACS has a "definite healing value."

While the tests are inconclusive and in early stages, Dr. Manwaring says they should "go far to decrease the current skepticism of the Soviet clinical claims."

ACS (antireticular sytotoxic serum) was developed in 1944 by the late Dr. Alexander A. Bogomolets of the Russian Ukraine. He announced the serum "combined with proper diet and care might enable man to live to 150 years of age."

More radical claims in the Soviet press led American scientists to discount entirely the first medical reports. But now Dr. Manwaring says a serum similar to ACS has been used with "considerable success" in speeding the rate of healing of broken bones.

Dr. Bogomolets predicted mankind would live longer—and healthier—from the use of the serum in preventing and treating diseases peculiar to aging and old age. ACS is made by extracting emulsified spleen and bone marrow from fresh human cadavers. While the actual product is a strong poison in large quantities, it was found to stimulate tissue growth when injected in minute doses.

This stimulation of the connective tissues of the body was believed likely to hold off or eradicate many of the symptoms and ailments of old age, thus prolonging life.
